From The Golden Closet:

This light blue beaded shirt and white pants with rhinestones were worn by legendary performer Michael Jackson on stage during the 1984 "Victory Tour"...The shirt was worn with multiple styles of pants during the tour. The pair of pants included with this outfit was worn with the shirt on opening night of the Dodger Stadium performances in Los Angeles, California on November 30, 1984. Mr. Jackson also appeared wearing the shirt in numerous photographs used to promote the Victory Tour. A majority of the print materials for the tour showcase Jackson wearing the shirt with a sequin and rhinestone encrusted gold and blue floral patterned jacket. This jacket is currently on display at the Grammy Museum in Los Angeles as part of their special exhibit, "Michael Jackson: A Musical Legacy." ...The long sleeved shirt with small stand collar is constructed of light blue silky polyester and is heavily embellished with clear bugle beads on the collar and front in a cascade pattern. The full sleeves are gathered at the shoulder and wrist, and are embellished from the cuff to the elbow with the same beading pattern. The stand collar is edged with large round rhinestones, and the front hidden-snap closure is edged with clear baguette rhinestones. The shirt attaches to the pants with bands of Velcro around the waist and also has Velcro fastenings at the cuffs. The Velcro and snaps were used to both keep the singer's shirt tucked in when dancing and to aid in quick changes between costumes during the live performances. The tab front pants are made of thick stretch polyester, and are embellished with stripes of clear bugle beads dotted with round rhinestones. The inner waistband has strips of Velcro sewn in to attach the shirt to the pants. Both pieces have the original Bill Whitten labels, and the shirt has an additional label with "MICHAEL JACKSON" printed in black ink sewn inside the collar. Both the shirt and pants were custom tailored for Mr. Jackson for his use on stage by costume designer Bill Whitten.
